MOSCOW - The Soviet Union outlined a timetable in talks with Pakistan last spring proposing to withdraw its troops from Afghanistan during an 18-month period, according to Soviet sources.

The main issues involve Chinese agreement to U.S. controls under the 1978 Nuclear Nonproliferation Act, which was designed to impede the spread of atomic weapons. China is covered by this law even though it has possessed nuclear weapons since its first test explosion in 1964.

Sources close to the negotiations said most of the problems in the Self-Determination, an umbrella way of concluding a nuclear coop-eration pact, which is a requirement for U.S. ouclear sales abroad, have been resolved.

Jordan Assembly Meets, Clears Way for Elections

By Rami G. Khouri. Washington Post Service

AMMAN, Jordan - Jordan's National Assembly met Monday quickly amended the constitution to authorize general elections in the East Bank of the country while the West Bank's Palestinians remain under Israeli occupation.

The action started in motion a long, complicated and perhaps politically controversial process. The National Assembly was suspended in 1974 after an Árab summit in Rabat, Morocco, recognized the Palestine Liberation Organization as the sole legitimate represen-tative of the Palestinian people. That created an awkward situation for the Jordanian National Assembly, with its 30 West Bank Palestinian members sitting alongside the 30 East Bank Jordanians in the elected lower house.

At Monday's special sessions, both the lower house and the appointed upper house approved an amendment that would allow gencral elections to take place only in the five Jordanian provinces of the East Bank, without simultaneous elections in the West Bank. The National Assembly will convene in regular session on Thursday, when King Hussein will address it.

the lower house will be filled through by-elections within two months, bringing the total in the lower house to 54. The 54 members would then select six representatives from the West Bank to fill the mpty West Bank seats and bring the house up to its full 60 members.

The new National Assembly could sit for the constitutionally mandated term of four years, or, as is more likely, may remain in power for up to one year, during which Jordanians will prepare for general elections only for the 30 East Bank members of the lower house.

After the next general elections take place, the 30 elected East Bank representatives would select 15 West Bank members, and together they would then pick another 15 from the West Bank -bringing the total in a new National Assembly to the required 60 members. Some pobtical observers and diplomats have seen the king's move as a Jordanian prejude to resuming the Middle East peace process, with support from West

U.S. Detects Syrian Desire To Cooperate

By Bernard Gwertzman New York Tymes Service

WASHINGTON - The United States no longer believes that Syria is trying to thwart efforts to reach agreement in Lebanon, according to Deputy Secretary of State Kenneth W. Dam.

Mr. Dam said Sunday that "events on the ground" were changing in Lebanon and the Unit-ed States was "quite prepared to seek progress" in talks with Syria.

He said Syria's decision last week to release a captured U.S. Navy flier, Lieutenant Robert O. Goodman Jr., may have been an indication of a new attitude.

Previously, President Ronald Reagan, Secretary of State George P. Shultz and other top officials had said that Syria was deliberately trying to block agreement in Lebanon by using its influence on the Druze and Shiite Moslems to prevent political progress.

"We have the impression that the Syrians are becoming more cautious," Mr. Dam said. "The Syrians no looger seem intent on sabotaging any progress."

His comments, made on the NBC television program "Meet the Press," came as U.S. officials continged to express optimism that a security arrangement could be worked out in allow the Lebanese government to extend its authority.

The various Lebanese parties have "agreed in principle" to the new arrangement. Mr. Dam said, "but there are various details that have to be ironed out." State Department officials had no comment on an Israeli announcement that Israel had not dropped its official position that it

BAALBEK, Lehanon -- The road into this bustling Bekaa Valley market town, the center today of Lebanon's Islamic militants, is adorned with huge wall paintings of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini overlooking the Al Aqsa mosque in Jerusalem. Inscriptions hang from telephone poles and buildings: "Death to America," "Israel must be wiped out of existence under the banner of Islam," "Martyrdom is the aim and hope of God's worshipers," revolution is Islamic before being Iranian and it is the revolution of the oppressed all over the world."

Such are the first signs of the presence of Iranian Revolutionary Guards and Lebanese Shiite Moslem fundamentalists who have broken away from the mainstream Amal movement to set up their own groups, Islamic Amal and Hezballah, under the Syrian umbrella and with Iranian political, financial and military support.

Once best known for its well-preserved Roman ruins and brisk business in hashish, Baalbek has become, according to Lebanese and Western analysts, the main staging ground for Iranian-Syrian terrorist activities in Lebanon and the spread of Ayatollah Khomeini's Islamic revolution.

At the Imam Muntazar School just east of the city. Iranian Revolutionary Guards carry out their missionary work, indoctrinating Lebanese Shiites in the spiritual and political teachings of Ayatollah Khomeini.

Here in Baalbek, 45 miles (70 kilometers) northeast of Beirut, a deadly political game is being played out:

Syria is trying to re-establish its political hegemony over Lebanon, and Iran is trying to spread militant islam throughout the Arab world.

The Syrians, according to Lebanese and Western mascus, then to Baalbek to help the Palestinians analysts, are using Iran's Hezballah and their Lebanese counterparts for terrorism to cow the Lebanese trolled Bekaa Valley as a springboard for their own politics in Lebanon, where one million Shiites live. Iran and its Lebanese allies are waging a battle with the relatively moderate leadership of the mainstream Amal for the shifting allegiances of those Shiites.

Amal, under the leadership of Nabih Berri, is at odds with Iran, having supported the Mujahidin opposition in the Iranian power struggle, and is at political war with the militant clergymen of Hezballah and the Iranian-backed Islamie Amal, led by Hussein

Some analysts say Syria is cynically making use of Islamic extremists, both Iranian and Lebanese. Syria, they predict, will disband them or put them under wraps as soon as it no longer needs them or decides they present a danger to Syrian influence.

Those analysts see the Syrian-Iranian alliance as unnatural and fragile, based primarily on a common enemy. Saddam Hussein in Iraq, as well as opposition to U.S. policies and presence in the region.

Since the start of the Iran-Iraq war more than three years ago, Syria has openly sided with Iran and is the only Arab state other than Libya to do so. Syria's president, Hafez al-Assad, has long been a bitter foe of Mr. Hussein. "If Iraq was not there as a common enemy, there would be no reason for the alliance," a Western European diplomat said. "Without Iraq, Iran would become a potential enemy of Syria." The origins of the cooperation among Syria, Iran and Lebanon's Islamic militants go back to the 1982 Israeli invasion of Lebanon. Within a week of the invasion, Iran sent 150 Revolutionary Guards to Da-against the Israeli Army.

The invasion provoked a split in the Amal leader-just twice before collapsing.

Mr. Mussavi, a fervent proponent of Ayatollah Khomeini's militant line, was then the top Amal military commander. He opposed Mr. Berri's participation, then resigned and came to Baalbek to set up the opposition Islamic Amal.

Analysis now say the first Syrian-Mussavi action may have been the kidnapping of David Dodge, the acting president of the American University in Beirut, on July 19, 1982.

He was seized by presumed Iranian agents, possibly Mr. Mussavi's, to bargain for the release of an Iranian diplomat who had been kidnapped two weeks earlier.

Mr. Dodge, freed in July, has never said what happened to him. But it is known that he was spirited out of Lebanon through the Bekaa Valley and taken to Iran by way of Damascus, President Assad and his brother, Rifaat, later were intermediaries in securing

To many observers, there seems to be a route used by Islamic militants and terrorists of both countries leading from the Iranian holy city of Qom into the southern suburbs of Beirut.

According to Lebanese and Western diplomatic ources, the Iranians have trained 300 to 350 Lebanese Shiite volunteers at a camp north of Qom. There is evidence that Islamic extremists were beinning to infiltrate the southern suburbs of Beirut as long ago as February and March 1983, when there was terrorism. a spate of attacks on French and Italian patrols of the multinational force. But it was only in August that the militants appeared in large numbers, participating in the Amal militia's attempt to storm West Beirnt.

Not much is known about the Hezballah movement except that it is closely tied to Iran and patterned on the Iranian revolution. #### EC Leader Warns of Budget Shortfall

BRUSSELS (AP) — The president of the European Community Commission predicted Monday that the EC budget would be 1.6 billion European currency units ($1.3 billion) short this year unless changes in farm programs were adopted.

Gaston Thorn made the prediction in an address at the first meeting this year of the 10 EC agriculture ministers, a spokesman said. There was no immediate reaction from ministers, whose two-day meeting is expected to set a procedure for dealing with the issues.

Mr. Thorn and other EC executives have been warning for months that the trade bloc will run out of money unless farm spending is curbed, but Mr. Thorn had not mentioned such a high figure.

Pretoria to Continue Patrols in Angola

JOHANNESBURG (AP) - A well-placed military source said Monday that South African tracker units would continue scouting Angola's southern provinces, bordering on South-West Africa, despite South

Bonn Says General Was Security Risk

BONN (UPI) — The West German defense minister, Manfred Worner, dismissed General Günter Kiessling as deputy NATO commander because a military intelligence investigation showed the general was a security risk, a ministry spokesman said Monday.

The spokesman refused to say what the risk was and declined to confirm or deny press reports that General Kiessling was a homosexual, well known in West German gay bars and therefore open to blackmail. General Kiessling, 58, was assigned to the NATO post in 1982.

The spokesman, Jürgen Reichardt, said at a news conference Monday that Mr. Wörner had ordered a security investigation of General Kiessling after being told last summer that he might be a risk. "The report indicated Kiessling was a danger to security," Mr. Reichardt said. In a newspaper interview Sunday, the general denied the allegations of homo-

Progress Reported on Beagle Channel

BUENOS AIRES (Reuters) — The basis for a settlement to the Beagle Channel dispute between Chile and Argentina will probably be announced by the Vatican this week, Foreign Ministry and diplomatic sources said Monday.

Pope John Paul II will announce that Argentina and Chile have agreed to negotiate a permanent solution to the century-old dispute over several small islands at the tip of South America within the framework of his 1980 mediation proposal, the sources said.

Details of the papal proposal are secret, but the diplomatic sources said it awards all the disputed islands, at the eastern end of the Beagle Channel south of Tierra del Fuego, to Chile. Chile would get 12 miles (about 19 kilometers) of territorial waters around the islands on the Atlantic side, beyond which the sea would be under Argentine jurisdiction.

Task Force Says Hunger Exists in U.S. But Dismisses Claims It Is 'Rampant'

By Robert Pear New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - A 13-member presidential commission has concluded that "hunger does persist" in the United States but that "allegations of rampant hunger simply cannot be documented." President Ronald Reagan's Task Force on Food Assistance, in the final draft of its report, says that cutbacks in federal spending for such assistance, made at Mr. Reagan's request, have not harmed the

The recent budgetary changes have not reduced the availability of the major federal food assistance to Americans with incomes at or below the poverty line," the panel

The Reagan administration's budget program was explicitly designed to protect the "truly needy," but the administration conceded that the circbacks would reduce benefits for many people just above the poverty line.

"The task force," according to the report, "does not see a need for major new spending initiatives or programs." Nevertheless, it offered more than a dozen major propos-als, including several that are expected to cause controversy.

The task force recommends that Congress make participation in coasting indeed food assistable programs optional for the states," the report said, in other words, states could drop out of all federal ing food stamps, and establish "autonomous programs," setting their own eligibility criteria and benefit would get the same proportion of total federal outlays for food assistance as it now receives, but the money would be in a lump sum, to be divided up as the state saw fit.

"People in need of food assistance would benefit if the programs were controlled at a more local level" because "needs vary from state to state," the report said. The panel said, for example, that food costs varied across the country, and it observed that different states had different proportions of children and elderly people in their popula-

In the first draft of its report, the panel called for n slight expansion of federal food assistance programs and the conversion of food stamps to cash benefits for the elderly and disabled. These proposals remain in the final draft, but they are balanced by proposals that could reduce benefits for some families. The task force did not explicitly say whether its proposals would result in a net increase or decrease in federal food aid.

Mr. Reagan created the task force Aug. 2, saying he was "deeply concerned" and "perplexed" over reports of hunger in "this great and wealthy nation."

The report contains long passages that say it is impossible to measure the precise extent of hun-ger in the United States. The chairman of the panel, J. Clayburn La Force Ir, is dean of the Graduate School of Management for the University of California at Los An-

The letter, signed by Governor Richard D. Lamm of Colorado, a Democrat. and Governor Thomas H. The official policy of the governors' association, they said, "calls for both an increased federal role in income security and a minimum national standard of assistance."

The cautious tone of the task force report is illustrated in this The task force must conclude

But at the same time, we are convinced that these efforts, taken together, provide an effective safety net that offers access to food istance to virtually all needy Americans."

The panel said it was "at present impossible to estimate the extent of that hunger with any reasonable degree of objectivity.

However, it said: "There are back on food to pay their rent and utility bills. There are individuals suggest that Congress consider oc- ed goods and postponed an income and families who, toward the end vels.

NEW YORK - Fewer foreigners visited New York last year, but a healthier U.S. economy brought an unexpected number of American visitors and business travelers to the city, making 1983 a surpris-ingly profitable year for tourism, travel officials say.

Profitable Year

New York Times Service

A little more than 17 million travelers of every nationality visited the five boroughs in 1983, or 200,000 more than in 1982, according to the New York Convention and Visitors Bureau. The bureau estimated that the visitors had spent $2.23 billion - also up slightly from last year.

The overall increase in tourism dollar and continuing economic problems in other countries that reduced the number of foreign visitors for the second year in a row. The total of foreign visitors was put at 2.4 million, 150,000 fewer than in 1982, or a decline of about 6 percent

The decline in foreign visitors was less, however, than that experienced by other U.S. cities. Miami, one of the hardest hit, saw a 24percent drop in foreign tourists, as well as a continuing fall in domestic travelers, tourism officials said.

Tilting Toward Iraq

President Reagan is confirming his adminis-tration's risk-laden decision to tilt toward Iraq - politically, not in arms sales - in the fran-Iraq war. It is the threat to escalate the war on the part of Iraq, desperate to avert defeat, that is the proximate cause of the current danger. But Mr. Rengan, in a statement to the French newspaper Le Figaro, carried forward publicly his administration's new view that the greater danger lies in Iran's threat to react to Iraqi escalation by closing the Gulf or otherwise laying waste the oil-producing capacity of Iraq and its neighbors and allies.

ft is plain enough why the administration is tilting, notwithstanding Baghdad's role in starting this grinding war in 1980 and its stand, somewhere between unhelpful and harmful, in the Arab-Israeli dispute. Iran is the inspiration, if not the actual source, of both the terrorism plaguing U.S. and allied targets in Lebanon and elsewhere, and of the revolutionary Islamic currents lapping at the conserva-tive oil-producing states of the Gulf. Support for Iraq in its current straits helps identify the United States with an Arab cause at a moment when many Arabs see Washington identifying excessively with Israel in other contexts.

There is, in the American government, a gnawing fear that the Iran-fraq war could yet spill over its local bounds. The disposition to regard the war as a plague on two deserving Middle East bouses has yielded to a judgment that the conflict signifies a rising danger to shipping and to the whole Western position in the Gulf. The moment next spring when fraq is scheduled to replace the offshore oil-loading facilities that Iran destroyed earlier in the war is being viewed with special apprehension. Will fran strike again? What will Iraq's reaction, or anticipation, be?

Prudence, then, permits and even compels a more active American effort to steer the war into channels of negotiation - the stated object of U.S. policy. The uncertainties, however, are considerable. The oil glut gives the United States a certain extra flexibility, but hardly reason to ignore the risk to the 10 million barrels of oil that come out of the Gulf each day. Iran, even if it does not attack tankers, can pick a target from among many oil facili-ties. By tilting toward Iraq, the United States takes on a new measure of responsibility not only to defend against Iran's moves but to temper Iraq's. The stakes are too high not to play the game with the greatest care.

This time

it is a former member of the ftalian Senate. Nino Pasti is hardly a threatening figure or a dangerous character likely to engage in terrorist acts or provoke violence. Not only has he been a member of parliament in a friendly country, be was before that a NATO general assigned to the Pentagon. He lived and worked in the United States for two years, having access to secrets and policy-makers at the highest level of the alliance. True, he opposes the deployment by the United States of cruise and Pershing-2 missiles in Europe and was invited to speak to Americans who share that view. But the law provides that visitors may be excluded only if their "activities would be prejudicial to the public interest or endanger the welfare, safety or security of the United States," It was not intended to be used to restrict speech or to keep out those whose political views are controversial.

All this denial-of-visa business has begun to make the United States look really stupid. Any of us can travel to Western Europe without visas of any kind. We are not asked what we intend to speak about or what meetings we expect to attend. Why then must America be

The Danger to Salmon

The Atlantic salmon has been bunted to the verge of extinction. A treasure to anglers and gourmets, and commercial fishermen on both sides of the ocean, the species is running out. The only hope is a program of severe self-denial. In 1967, the catch in estuaries, spawning rivers, and oceanic home waters was almost 10,500 tons. In 1982, with many more sporting bunters and much more efficient commercial fishing, the catch declined by 40 percent, to 6,100 tons. This year, spawning runs in Canadian rivers were reported down more than 50 percent from 1982. The Newfoundland commercial catch dropped to barely balf that of three years ago.

All fish species wax and wane in specific areas, responding to changes in climate, food and water quality. The Atlantic salmon are spawned in the fresh water of hundreds of rivers, to which each fish returns when ready to reproduce. Any reduction of the catch can

The migratory nature of salmon makes limiting the catch a problem in international relations. like saving the whales. Several nations, including the United States and the European Community as a whole, are parties to the North Atlantic Salmon Conservation Organization, accepting eatch limits imposed by its treaty. But last year's catch was far below those limits. To preserve Atlantic salmon, these nations will have to agree to a painful six-year fishing ban covering the cycle that brings full-grown salmon to the native river.

confidently be ascribed to overkill.

Nothing less will enable the fish to rebuild

It is relatively easy for Americans to urge such costly restraint; the United States's commercial salmon fishing is trivial. To prove a willingness to share in the sacrifice, however, Americans should offer to suspend river fishing for sport as well, even though it kills only 10 percent of the annual total.

Two U.S. organizations, Restoration of Atlantic Salmon in America, and Tront Unlimited, call for banning salmon fishing in rivers that lack enough salmon to cover the spawning beds. That would require a national policy and effective management by the states concerned. The refusal of American sportsmen to defer their present pleasures for future benefit would reinforce the opposition to a ban on all ocean netting.

Commercial fishermen, faced with an immediate financial loss, generally argue in favor of continuing the catch. They hope that the species will be regenerated by some unforeseen stroke of fortune or that they can eventually shift to another prey. The salmon, bearing the mysterious impulse that takes them up rapids, over waterfalls and through placid river pools back to the stream where each first felt life, express the essence of life's drive to regenerate. But that drive takes a heavy toll from the fish and it cannot be sustained without matching sacrifice from those who love them.

UNESCO Seen From London

Last month's decision by the United States to pull out of UNESCO at the end of this year has plunged the often-troubled organization into the gravest crisis in its 38-year history. Yet people from dozens of its member states both diplomats and members of the demoralized and apprehensive secretariat - are close to applauding the U.S. decision.

They hope that the prospect of UNESCO losing its American funding - 25 percent of its budget - will at last stop the organization's degeneration into a forum for and-Western extremists. They also hope that, more immediarely, it will secure [Director-General Amadou Mahtar] M'Bow's resignation. Real reform would require Mr. M'Bow's departure. He can be dismissed only by the full neral conference, and that is improbable. But be might be persuaded to resign. - Rosemary Righter in The Sunday Times.

It would be hard to quarrel with the basic objectives of UNESCO. Yet it is not easy to quarrel either with the U.S. decision. But even if America goes, UNESCO can continue, with sufficient democracies participating to seek its reform. It will be obliged to cut its coat to size.

Poverty and Instability in the Caribbean

WASHINGTON -- A week before the Gre-nada invasion, a member of Jamaica's parliament who was a supporter of Edward Seaga, the pro-American prime minister, got out of his car in Kingston and was gunned down. That was soon after government forces in Trini-dad had stormed Moslem bouseholds, where they claimed to find large arms caches which they said were being prepared for an attempted leftist overthrow of the government by Moslems. In the past year there have been attempted coups in St. Lucia by Marxists and in Dominica by an ex-prime minister who favors more social-ism. In Antigua a Marxist is being prosecuted for sedition on charges of encouraging strikes meant to destabilize the government.

Political instability is rife among the strongest democratic governments in the Caribbean. Despite the popularity of the U.S. invasion of Grenada and the expulsion of Cubans from there, the Caribbean remains a spawning ground for incipient revolutions.

The turmoil continues despite the recent swing away from leftist governments, notably that of Michael Manley in Jamaica, and toward pro-

U.S. governments like Mr. Seaga's.
The U.S. action in Grenada did not wipe out Cuban and Soviet influence in the region; it simply dealt with one dramatic case. The region is still governed by a string of unstable governments that remain ripe for coups.

The reason for this instability is the overwhelming poverty of the Caribbean. It draws revolution like flies to an open sore.

For the first time we are seeing violent coups in the Caribbean like we have seen in Africa," said a U.S. diplomat in the area. "People are desperate and guns and ideologies are available from one source or another to every malcontent." Unemployment in the Caribbean now averages more than 20 percent, according to bank officials in several of the countries. That figure does not include a large force of impoverished field hands or drifters and black market traders in drugs and prostitution.

TEW YORK -The traditional, post-World War II American

By Juan Williams

The foreign debts of the Caribbean nations are big: $2 billion in Jamaica; $820 million in Trinid; $933 million in Guyana; $332 million in Barbados. The situation is exacerbated by a drop in prices for bauxite and by a decline in tourism.

For ordinary Caribbean citizens, the shortage of foreign currency means shortages of basic imported goods, particularly food. In Guyana, President Forbes Burnham's government has stopped importing wheat flour to restrain the growing foreign debt. The result is anger and ng in the country not only about bread now $4 a loaf on the black market - but about shortages common throughout the Caribbean: of workbooks for schoolchildren, of fresh milk, of red meat and canned goods such as soups.

The best-off island residents face constant electrical blackouts, poor phone service and long lines for expensive gasoline when it is available. For the poor, who form the majority, the problems are more stark—lack of food or of running water. They can be seen in the small hills around downtown Port of Spain, the capital of Trinidad, which is the most prosperous nation in the Caribbean after an oil boom in the early 1970s.

Deep-seated pessimism can be felt in the changing culture bere. Reggae and Rastafarians attract the smart, tough youths.

"This is radio revolution here," said Lenox Raphael, a playwright and activist in Trinidad. If you take over the radio station in one of these islands you take over the country, because the people are so open to any new idea, any new bope to get them away from the poverty. Listen to the music. Reggae lyrics aren't about limbo. They are about how the system has got to fall."

Caribbean leaders said one reason an invasion of Grenada was necessary was that Cubans had taken over the island's powerful radio station. That would have allowed them to export revolution throughout the region, Mr. Seaga fretted.

And he has cause for concern. The poor of Jamaica are restiess:

They're disappointed with Seaga," said Hec-tor Wynter, editor of the Daily Gleaner, "be-cause the economy has not come back.... Seaga promised to bring prosperity, to bring the U.S. dollar into the country by being pro-American. It hasn't happened... When expectations are raised and not met, that means trouble."

The economy of the region is so troubled that Caribbean leaders are reluctant to accept what looks like a gift from the United States — the Caribbean Basin Initiative. The Caribbean Community and Common Market has yet to endorse the Reagan initiative. Caribbean leaders fear that the removal of tariffs on exports to the United States could lead to increased imports that would make a few rich but cause major shortages of foods that form the area's main export.

"We have sugar, rice, minerals and the like that are produced bere." said Guyana's President Burnham. "If we sell more to the United States, that means less for people here. And there are already shortages."

The overwhelming opinion among Caribbean officials and diplomats is that Grenada will not blossom with an infusion of American capital because there is no sound economic structure to build on. Large investments will be squandered and the United States will be frustrated and will blame Grenada for not doing enough.

And if that happens, some Caribbean politi-cians predict that the new Maurice Bishops socialists - will emerge in Grenada as an alternative to the American voice.

To solve their underlying problems, Caribbean officials say, they need two things: indigenous industry to provide jobs, and increased cooperation among the Caribbean countries to allow for cost-efficient division of labor in the region. But in the aftermath of Grenada that cooperation

The Year After: NATO's Post-Euromissile Strategy

LONDON - Now that the initial deployments have begun of NATO's new intermediate-range nuclear forces, Western leaders understandably are tempted to breathe a collective sigh of relief. The Euromis-sile year is history. But many of the rifts opened last year are too deep to go away; many now familiar issues remain on the political-security agenda for 1984. Notanie among them in Europe are a new form of anti-Americanism and simmering debate over the proper defense - nuclear or conventional. Both issues are likely to come to a boil this year at a time of international flux, according to Western officials and experts planning to attend a three-day meeting starting Thursday in Brussels. The meeting, under the auspices of the Center for Strategic and tnternational Studies of George-town University, will be held under the chairmanship of Henry Kissin-ger; Senator Sam Nuon of Georgia; Helmut Schmidt, the former West German chancellor, and Leo Tinde-mans, the Belgian foreign minister. The international context is tersely summed up in the paper of another participant. William G. Hyland, the newly appointed editor of Foreign Affairs magazine. The outlook is for further deterioration in U.S.-Soviet relations, a worsening of the trend that began with the December 1979 invasion of Afghanistan. The future direction of East-West relations will depend more on the West, on the ability of the Atlantic allies to develop an effective strategy over a protracted period," Mr. Hy-land says, adding, "In the winter of 1983-84, there is no such strategy." He concludes: "This fact happens to coincide with a gathering crisis in the Soviet empire, with potential changes in the policies of the major Asian powers - China and Japan and the financial economic crisis in the Third World. In short, it is a time of unusual fluidity in world affairs. But, for the West, it could be a time of unusual opportunities," To seize the initiative, leaders of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization countries must find the ingenuity and determination to capitalize on the alliance's success in achieving its nuclear goals last year.

One obstacle is the new anni-Amer- ventional defenses. It was inevitable icanism becoming evident in many that this issue would emerge, because European circles. Previous bouts of it interests both the nuclear disarmers anti-Americanism developed mainly out of resentment against an imagined U.S. hegemony, a feeling that the United States was too strong, too influential. The current strain reflects a mood of fear generated by nuclear disarmers' apocalyptic visions.

Fear of the bomb, mixed with a misplaced belief that the United States originated the idea of intermediate-range missiles in Europe, created a susceptible mood. Some careless statements by Reagan administration officials beightened it.

More basic, bowever, is a change in mood that has left many Europeans frustrated over their inability to control their destiny in the nucleur era. This new psychology is here to stay, regardless of any change in the occupancy of the White House. It should not be confused with pro-Sovietism.

U.S. officials should be tactful in handling this new situation in Europe. And Europeans should remember that they cannot afford the collapse of the Atlantic community.

The security agenda — for the Brussels meeting and for the coming year in the alliance — is dominated by a new enthusiasm for the idea that the West can reduce the risk of a nuclear war by strengthening its conventional arsenal, partly with new weapons and technologies. This change is desirable both as a reflection of changing military realities and because it provides a politically sounder basis for deterrence. But it does not, as some nucleardisarmament advocates misleadingly suggest, imply that General Rogers wants NATO to adopt a doctrine of "no first use" of nuclear arms. If

NATO needs nuclear arms to prevent defeat, there should be no doubt in a potential aggressor's mind that NATO is willing to use them. Beyond this, there is the question of whether the nuclear opponents would support the increased expenditures required for the conventional arms build-up they advocate. The mood of penury is perilously strong in Europe.

The European allies are rapidly scaling back their military budgets. Even Britain, the most stalwart ally in this respect, has announced that it will not extend the 3-percent annual increase, agreed by the allies in 1978, beyond its original end-date of 1986. Yet the Rogers plan for better NATO conventional deterrence calls:

for continued modest increases in spending. Some Europeans appear to be giving hip service to the conventional-arms option without accepting the financial commitment. European attitudes on this vexed question will be closely watched in Washington, where the Reagan ad-ministration tentatively has decided to ask Congress for a 17-percent in-crease in military spending.

Even though the missile issue seems solved, European equivocation on the need for a conventional arms follow-up could give ammunition to Americans who advocate withdrawing U.S. forces from Europe.

America's Misused Diplomats

By Jack Perry

This is the first of two parts. HARLESTON, South Carolina - The American diplomatic The American diplomatic service is being underused missised and abused. Americans are not getting out of it what they are paying for and what the country needs.

As a Foreign Service Officer recently refried after 24 years, I believe that the state of American diplomatic requires does matter that the coef to service does matter, that the cost to the country of its misuse and neglect the country of its missise and neglect is getting higher, and that we ought to do something about it.

Somehow, in the heady years of power after World War II, we Americans decided that we could "do" foreign policy with one hand tied behind our back, changing our minds and our course when we wished, imposing our will on world events structures the our will on world events, enjoying the luxury of partisan politics and dis-daming the discipline of consistency and professionalism in foreign po-licy. Knowing a country really well whether the Soviet Union or Vietnam or Iran - became irrelevant.

I say the record shows that you cannot "do" foreign policy that way, and that the Foreign Service is not expendable. But I have to acknowledge that today the career service is in a parlous state, for these reasons:

Most critically, the Foreign Service does not enjoy the confidence of presidents. When I was detailed to work in the executive office of the president during the Nixon administration, my boss told me, "Over here, don't mention that you're from State — they're not trusted." The same mistrust, in varying degrees, can be substantiated in every president from

Franklin Roosevelt. Why? Because, presumably, presidents believe, or are persuaded, that career diplomats are not loyal to them personally but are loyal either to the opposition party or else to the diplomat's own idea of what foreign policy should be. This is a burn rapi Nearly everyone I have known in the Foreign Service believed that foreign policy descended from the president, ft is true that diplomats do at times have images of the national interest that vary from those of the president's advisers. But once policy is set, I maintain, career diplomats try their best to carry it out.

fdeology counts more and more. although career diplomats are by training and tradition nonpartisan and nonideological. When I joined the service it was still punchy from the McCarthy onslanght. The sound of "all those Communists in the State Department" is quaint to our ears pepartment is quant to our eary today; but attacks against officers on ideological grounds is a current, not an historical, phenomenon, and some stnators have held up important as-signments with charges not unfille those leveled by Joseph McCarthy. I was in Sweden when the Social Democrats lost power for the first time in 33 years, and the new nonsocialist government changed a total of about five positions in the Foreign Ministry. In America, new administrations routinely clean house of senior career officers. Purges of those working in arms control are notorious. In my own area, Soviet and East European affairs, the old fraternity of experienced Russian-speaking specialists has been largely disbanded, with new assignments often going to those whose preconceptions about Russia are in tune with the people in office.

No one challenges the president's right to name his appointees. But a practice of bouncing experienced diplomats from their posts simply because they worked for a previous administration will make a coherent foreign policy hard to attain.

If the president's advisers assume that career people are not loyal, and if they have no regard for profealism in diplomacy, they are likely to push noncareer appointments not only to ambassadorships, but also to more and more of the jobs that matter in the State Department itself.

The record on ambassadorships is fairly well known. At last count, 59 percent of the Reagan appointments to ambassador were from the career ranks, compared with 73 percent for Carter, 68 percent for Nixon and Ei-scahower, 65 percent for Truman, 62 percent for Ford and 58 percent for Kennedy. But the number of posts has grown, so that percentages look tolerable, although important posts are increasingly in noncareer hands. In Europe, only 4t percent of those named under Mr. Reagan have been career ambassadors.

All too often, political appointees lack the basic qualifications for dip-lomatic assignments — and the in-competents far outnumber the Harri-mans and Bruces and Mansfields. The Foreign Service has increas ingly lost its proud separate status and has been lumped in with the federal civil service. While the perquisites and rewards of the military have grown, the Foreign Service has been made to feel like an orphan.

Finally, career patierns are changing, raising new problems. One "problem" no one objects to is the rising attractiveness of the service to new entrants: In recent years more than 25,000 applicants have taken the entry examination while about 250 were admitted. The problem starts when their expectations of useful careers soon start to run into obstructions — and the decline of good jobs at the top is affecting everyone. The number of senior officers without assignments the "hall walk-ers," has become unconscionably large. The senior officer finds himse the victim of very short assignment patterns and pressure to move on. The waste is tremendous. And the upshot is that the diplomat's belief in the system is declining

Texans Defend 'One for the Road' Despite Lobby, Drinking While Driving Remains Legal

By Paul Taylor Washington Past Service

AUSTIN, Texas - Having one for the road is more than a figure of speech in big, hot, dusty Texas. It's just this side of an inalicnable right. Texas, like many other states has a new drunken-driving law, and starting this year second-time ofsenders go straight to jail. But also still alive in Texas is a countervailing institution, the "roadie," a libation bought at a gasoline station or taken out of the fridge to sip while driving down the highway. Texas is not the only state where open containers of alcohol are legal in moving vehicles. But in Texas, the habit of drinking while driving is woven into the fabric of everyday

Nine other states have higher highway fatality rates than Texas, according to a spokesman for the Insurance Institute for Highway Safety in Washington.

The spokesman said that states that have no "open-container" laws are scattered geographically and that it is difficult to gage the impact of the absence of the laws on fatali-

N.Y. Governor Seeks Legalization Of Sports Betting to Fund Schools

NEW YORK - Governor Mario M. Cuomo this month will propose creating a form of legalized sports betting in New York to raise extra money for education, according to officials of his adminis-

"We will be proposing a lottery based on sports events," said Michael Finnerty, the state budget director. State officials said on Sunday that the proposal would initially involve wagering on the results of professional football, basketball and baseball games. Other professional sports would be added later, they said.

Budget officials said they expected that the betting would raise about $100 million a year, and that the money would be used in part to finance new education programs.

The director of the state lottery, John D. Quinn, said that New York would be the second state to permit betting on professional sports. Sports betting of many kinds is legal in Nevada, Mr. Oninn said that the governor's plan was intended to capture some of the revenues bet illegally in New York.

And, although the anti-drinking group likes to blame the liquor and convenience-store lobbies, it appears clear that something larger, something that cuts close to what being a Texan is all about, torpedoed the proposal. People say the "something" has to do with rugged individualism. with dannting distances between towns, with hot roads, with dry counties - one-third of Texas's counties sell no liquor - and, perhaps above all, with the idea that government "just shouldn't be messing with a guy doing whatever in the hell a guy wants to do," as Mr. Wood put it.

Also, according to state Representative Gary Thompson, "there's kind of a macho mystique attached to drinking and driving, particular-ly in the more rural counties. It's sort of a frontier othic."

A rivalry of manners is occurring in the state as it marches, relentlessly but not remorselessly, from range to subdivision within a few

Texas is fast becoming the sec ond most populous state. It is ex-pected to pass New York within a decade and is already more urbanized than the United States as a whole, with 80 percent of its residents living in metropolitan areas.
The freedoms of ranch and range still exert a powerful pull on the social psyche. Some argued that the open-con-tainer bill would create a litter problem, that motorists, seeing police cars, would toss out cans and bottles on the side of the road.

Some said it would be an open invitation for the police to make otherwise illegal searches of vehicles, an especially sore point with black and Hispanic legislators. Representative Erwin Barton, who represents a working-class suburb of Houston, had a different objection. He said an open-container law might create more car-

Colonel James B. Adams, director of the Department of Public Safety, said he found the arguments against an open-container law "mighty lame." Still, be does not underestimate their force,

"I've caught so much flak from friends about pushing the opencontainer law that I finally told my wife it was almost as if Texans think it's written in the state constitution that you can drink and drive," he said. "And she said, No, dear, it's more like they think the constitution says you must drink

French Police Make Little Progress In Solving New Year's Eve Bombings

New York Times Service PARIS - Despite the receipt last week of a letter that handwriting experts said appeared to have been written by the international terrorist known as Carlos, officials have made little headway in efforts to solve New Year's Eve bombings in France that killed five persons and wounded 50.

One bomb went off in a Marseilles raiload station, the other aboard a high-speed train 120 miles to the north.

The letter, received Thursday by gence France-Presse in West Berlin, said the bombings were carried out by a group called the Arab Armed Struggle. Experts said the handwriting in the letter was that of Carlos, who is known to have been affiliated with the group at least since 1975.

U.S. Investigating Use By Army of Belgian Nazi As a Spy After WW II

By Ralph Blumenthal

NEW YORK - For the second time in a year, the Justice Department has begun an inquiry into the use of a Nazi war criminal by U.S. intelligence authorities after World

The new investigation involves Robert Jan Verbelen, a Belgian SS Officer and police commandant who was tried in absentia, coovicted and sentenced to death for war crimes by a Belgian military court in 1947. Mr. Verbelen, 72, still lives in Vienna. He said Friday in a telephone interview that he had organized a U.S. spy network of 100 Soviet-bloc agents in Vienna after

He denied baving committed any of the crimes, including the killing of Jews and the mistreatment of two captured U.S. pilots. for which be was convicted in what be portrayed as a seven-minute trial.

The army records, long classified and still heavily censored, were obtained through a Freedom of Information request by the Anti-Dela-mation League of B'nai B'rith. Stepben S. Trott, an assistant attorney general in the Justice Department's criminal division, wrote to the Anti-Defamation League last month that a "review" of the case was under way.

It marks the second time that the try. Its timing mechanism was hid-special investigations office. formed in 1978 to deport Nazi war criminals living illegally in the United States, has been directed to examine a case involving someone outside the country.

Last August, the Justice Department issued a report on its findings that U.S. counterintelligence authorities in West Germany bad employed Klaus Barbie, a former Gestapo leader in occupied France, and belped him escape to South America in 1951.

An examination of the Verbelen records obtained from the army suggests that, as with the Barbie case, at least some intelligence officials were ignorant of their agent's true identity. But, because of the substantial material blacked out of the army documents, many aspects remain hidden.

Army files describing Mr. Verbelen's true identity say that be was born April 5, 1911, in Gerent Bei Loweo. Belgium, and that be served as an officer in both the general SS, or Nazi elite guard, and the SD, the Nazi security service.

Mr. Verbelen said in the interview that, as the Nazis retreated, he fled to Germany and served as chief of police, with the rank of ment of 5,000 schillings.

general, in a Flemish government-in-exile. Mr. Verbelen's indictment before a military court in Brussels in 1947 charged him with having ordered and taken part in killings and torture and with having attacked a farm where two U.S. pilots were hiding. The court found Mr. Verbelen guilty of 67 charges and condemned him to "death by a bullet."

Mr. Verbelen said in the interview that he was just an officer who was among thousands of Flemish officers unjustly condemned to death in mass postwar trials. He called the allegations involving the fliers "a shameless lie" and said that he never saw a U.S. pilot during the war.

In 1945, according to army records. Mr. Verbelen was hired as a barrender in a U.S. officers' club in Austria. Whether he arrived under his own name is unclear. He said in the interview that he had escaped from Germany with false papers but that he had told the Americans in Austria his true name.

That same year he began to work with what the army records called, without elaboration, "U.S.A. Special Services." That work was said to have ended in 1946. The next sentence in army documents is blacked out but it appears from Mr. Verbelen's own statements that this is when he took on other U.S. intelligence duties.

Any description of Mr. Verbelen's intelligence work for the Americans is blacked out of the army papers made public. But in the telephone interview and in earlier accounts he said that he had organized an Eastern European spy network that succeeded in exposing an attempted 1950 Soviet putsch aimed at undermining Austrian neutrality.

The army records also indicate that be had doctored his history. At first he said he was born Nov. 30. 1914, in Apia, German Samoa, that he attended school in Stutigart and college in Lowen. Belgitm. He said he had heen a captain and recruiting officer for a German Army division, had served in SD headquarters, and was a reserve commando. When this story was found to be false in 1956, the papers show, Mr. Verbelen told another story that also contained discrepancies and fell sbort of the full extent of his wartime service, although he acknowledged that he had "worked closely with the SS and SD during the German occupation of Bel-

YEAR END REPORT FROM THE INTERNATIONAL HERALD TRIBUNE TO ITS READERS AND ADVERTISERS

It was the Canadian Philosopher, Marshall McLuhan, who popularized the term "the global village" in describing the impact on international life of modern media. In this context, the International Herald Tribune, which began publishing 96 years ago as a "village newspaper" for the international community living in nineteenth century Paris, can still be seen as a "village newspaper" helping to strengthen the sense of global community among internationally minded readers in 165 countries around the world. Growing Circulation Global circulation for the IHT moved upward faster in 1983 than in any year in recent memory. The paper began 1983 with an average of 138,000 paid copies sold per day. By the fall we were selling a daily total of 163,000 copies. And while some of this fluctuation is related to seasonal factors, our annual average equally between our European edition (now 96 years old) and our new Asian edition. But the IHT's single largest market is not in any one country on the ground. Each day, more than 31,000 copies are sold to international airlines.

Independent surveys show that the average copy of the IHT is read by 2.4 readers which means that in late 1983 some 400,000 people were reading each issue of the International Herald Tribune. At the beginning of 1983 there were only five countries in the world where the IHT did not have at least one regular reader - four tiny islands in the Pacific and one in the Caribbean. Happily, the Tribless number has been reduced to four as two IHT subscriptions now go to Nauru, located in the Pacific Ocean, west of New Guinea. The Hague Launch

Champagne corks popped in The Hague this October when this newspaper launched its sixth facsimile printing operation. The Hague is the IHT's fourth printing site in Europe along with Paris, Zurich, London and marks our first new European launch since 1977. (In 1980 and 1982, the IHT opened new printing sites in . Hong Kong and Singapore.) Printing in The Hague enables the IHT to deliver the newspaper earlier than ever before throughout the Benefux countries, northern Germany and Scandinavia, where there is a strong and growing appetite for international news. Future facsimile sites are under active consideration as we continue to employ the newest technology to speed the IHT to homes and offices around the world.

Growth in Asia In 1980, before the IHT launched its Hong Kong printing operation, circulation in Asia was approximately 1,500 copies per day. Via space satellite we now transmit each morning's paper within minutes to Hong Kong and Singapore for swift printing and distribution. By the end of 1983, circulation in the region was approaching 24,000 per day.

Editorial Advances

We believe that the growing audience for the IHT is a reflection of its continuing improvement as a source of international news. analysis and commentary. In 1983 our editors continued their own development and expansion program. The year's single most important investment has been a new Atex editorial computer system, enabling us not only to bring news and business statistics into our Paris editorial newsroom faster than ever before, but also to review, to edit and to typeset this material with greater speed and precision. Today, every issue of the IHT carries final New York stock prices (set in type in Paris within a few minutes of the close of the New York Exchange). The IHT is the only international paper to run full New York stock prices the morning after each trading day.

A variety of new IHT features range from special business page columns each day to the Garfield comic strip, from the weekly science page to the twice-aweek American Topics briefing. In addition, some 65 Special Reports providing in-depth analyses of nations, regions and other special topics were carried in the IHT in 1983. And the Trib's editorial page continues as one of the world's most respected forums for a wide spectrum of viewpoints.

Advertising Progress Advertisers promoting financial services, corporate and industrial names, travel, luxury items, tobacco, liquor, automobiles, and dozens of other product and service categories invested substantially more money in the IHT during 1983 than ever before in history. The IHT's worldwide advertising revenue grew by 18% in 1983, and indications are that this trend will continue in 1984.

One of our ongoing advertising success stories is the continued strong showing of the Classified category. Classified advertisers have homes for rent or sale, recruit personnel, market automobiles, offer education facilities. They're advertisers who demand immediate results from their messages, and their strong use of the IHT is continuing evidence of the paper's power to perform for them. Of course, the major reason for the continued success of the IHT as a global advertising medium is the extraordinary caliber of the IHT's readers: : • $70,383 annual average The Harm income, 81% possessing at least one university degree,

• 87% in business and commerce, • 84% of those in business at the senior executive level.

> Other Projects, Other Products

The IHT conducted four major international conferences in 1983, seeking to perform in this . way the same role it plays journalistically — bringing vital information from those who have it to those who need it. Trade and Development in the ASEAN region provided the focus for February's Singapore conference. The policies of the new Spanish government were examined in May in Madrid. And our annual conferences on Foreign Exchange and on Oil and Money were held in London this past fall. The IHT's book publishing program was also expanded.

Speaking for the more than 350 full-time members of the IHT's worldwide staff, I am pleased to report that your newspaper is closing its books on one of the most successful years in its history, and moving into 1984 confident that we can continue to expand and improve the services we provide to our worldwide family of readers and advertisers.

Prime Minister Felipe Gonzalez addressing the IHT's "New Spanish Economic Policies' Conference in Madrid in May.

To all of you we extend our warmest thanks for your interest and loyal support. We continue to welcome your comments and reactions, your questions and suggestions, as we work to make this newspaper an increasingly effective medium for truly global communication.

Respectfully yours,

Music by the Zappa-Boulez Duo

By Michael Zwerin

ional Herald Tribune PARIS — Frank Zappa is on the road alone. He has been here since New Year's Eve without his rock band, road crew, personal manager and bodyguard, which means he has to carry his own monpointments and call his bank to make sure the musicians are paid. Last night, Pierre Boulez and his prestigious Ensemble Intercontemporain were scheduled to perform three of Zappa's classical compositions at the Théâtre de la Ville, with the jumpy composer in the audience. The compositions are being recorded today and tomorthat is, if Zappa got through to his bank. One record compan had proposed unrealistic financial conditions and another sent an unsatisfactory last-minute telex. During a rehearsal break on Friday, Zappa mumbled through bis world-famous mustache: "I hate record companies.' He was sitting at a table next to the rehearsal room podium turning score pages, as a serious and concentrated Boulez conducted the run-through. There was only one hour allotted for him, and there would be just one more hour on the afternoon of the performance. Zappa took notes and when the hour was over, he discussed a long list of corrections with Boulez at the lectern, while Boulez took

The music is reminiscent of Stravinsky, Berg or Zappa's early hero Edgar Varèse. "It has melody, chords and strict rhythms," Zappa explained, "pretty old-fashioned stuff, but that's what I want to hear." One of the ensemble's young musicians remarked that he had heard this kind of music before and would prefer to play something closer tn Zappa's rock. Zappa remarked that be would prefer to have his music played as written.

Later the same day, in the lobby of his hotel - an extremely expensive hotel few classical composers could afford - Zappa said: "My rock 'n' roll band plays stuff like 10 notes in 3 beats or 9 over 7 all the time, though that seems to be difficult for an nrchestra that is not used to that sort of thing. But if you happen to like to write classical music you also have to get used to the fact that it is under-financed, the time allntted for rehearsals is inevitably insufficient and if it's played anywhere near accurately

At the age of 14, Zappa was living in a "little stinky cowboy town" called El Cajon, near San Diego, playing snare drum in the junior high school orchestra. Rehearests were horing, he was always of a bar in Watts "where we used to counting rests. Then one day be go for 6 A.M. jam sessions." walked into a record store in neigh-boring La Mesa and was "bowled over" by a recording the store was playing as a hi-fi demonstration; The Complete Wnrks of Edgar Varèse, Vol. 1, which was "swimming in percussion."

Two months later I bought a my house and I'd say, 'Hey, listen to this,' and they'd say, 'You're crazy. Take that off.'" So the boy who was to become a 1960s rock star with 1980s staying power began to write classical music ("I learned how from a book"). It was performed only after his popular music allowed him to afford such a houry. His symphonic works have recently been played by the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra and the London Symphony Orchestra and Boulez says he takes Zappa's compositions very serious-"I am interested by instrumental styles and disciplines that come from outside the usual 'classical'

area," Boulez said. Zappa's rock is itself "classical:" structured, ambitious, heavily orchestrated, with shifting tempos, keys, dynamics and textures played with incredible precision. He frequently conducts his band with a baton, stiff-backed, as though a symphony orchestra ought to be there. Boulez was impressed when he went to hear Zappa's highly tooled rock some years ago, Zappa sent him some scores and this performance resulted.

The three pieces, which total a little more than 20 minutes and should constitute one side of the record are called "Perfect Strang-"Naval Aviation in Art?" and "Dupree's Paradise." "Perfect Stranger" starts with a perfect third on the chimes, a vacuum cleaner salesman ringing a doorbell, and if view. Pierre Boulez, one of the most you have that clue you can hear a hose sucking air in the middle. But the world, asked me to write someit is not an essential clue, Zappa says: "Somebody asked Varese a convenient way of cataloging the not tell you the emotional story. It

"Somehow I stumbled on an arwarships, planes going down and stuff like that. It was headed 'Naval Aviation in Art.' Are we supposed to take this seriously or what? I added the guestion mark.

"Dupree's Paradise" is the name

On the difference between classical and rock musicians: "I hire the gnys in my band myself, I have a psychological profile of them before we get to play anything. And usually you find with rock musicians a strong motivation to be spectacular on stage because after recording of Stravinsky's 'Rite of the show they're looking for that Spring.' Those were the only two groupie at the end of the rainbow. albums 1 owned. Everything else I've got some pretty distressing-was R&B singles by people like The looking individuals in my band but Orchids. My friends would come to still they're convinced that if they play good they're going to score.
You take that into consideration when you hire the guy. What does it take to get a good performance out of him? If it helps, we'll put a special spotlight on him. The important thing is to get the piece played properly. "Classical musicians are generally totally bored. It's a constant battle to make people pay attention to what they're doing. They often have no desire to hear the sounds they're making."

The other side of the record will be computer music he is writing on his Synclavier in the studio in his Los Angeles home, where he lives with his wife and four children: "There are also two engineers, two maintenance guys, a secretary and a carpenter generally around the bouse. I have what I consider one of the best digital recording studios in the world. I've got a new rock record coming out in six weeks. Writing classical music takes up little of my time because I've got a big overhead and it's the least lucrative thing that I do.

"One nice thing about a computer is that you don't have to worry about 9 over 7 coming out right. Everything is always lined up properly. I tell the machine what to do and it does it."

Then why bother to write for real

"Look at it from my point of thing for his ensemble which is. like, the primo creamo of the conwhy he named his pieces things like tempo worldo; am 1 supposed to 'Ionization' and he said 'It serves as say no? Secondly the computer can work.' I mean, 'Til Eulenspiegel's can give you the exact mathemati-Merry Pranks' has already been cal design, hnt what's missing is the used, so I have to find some other eyebrows."

It was Friday and Zappa was going to have in move fast or this ticle from an old Life magazine week's recording session could not that had paintings done by guys on be set up to fullow the Monday concert. So he excused himself: "I have to go up to my room and call my bank in California. The ultimate indignity for a composer, to have to call his bank so he can get

Madrid's Fine Arts Come Full Circle

By Nina Damton

New York Times Service MADRID — A new board of directors of Madrid's Circle of Fine Arts has ambitious plans to modernize and revitalize that venerable institution. It has already helped to arrange a police raid on the Recently, police marched into the palace that houses the Circle of Fine Arts, built in 1910 as a center. for the city's cultural life, and into one of the former dining rooms. There, beneath crystal chandeliers and surrounded by marble pillars, they broke up an illegal poker game, confiscating about 30,000 pesetas (about $200) and taking the names of participating club bers and employees.

On the same day, police also entered a small basement room on nearby Marques de Valdeiglesias Street. This room, leased by employees of the circle in the name of Friends of Painting, appeared to be less devoted to high art than to high stakes. Police found checks for 500,000 pesetas.

The employees, porters at the Circle of Fine Arts, contended that the checks were to pay for the paintings that adorned the walls. The police, noting that the paintings were by unknown artists, were skeptical. They also said owners of the syndicate were lending money to members at interest rates as high as 10

From 1960 to 1979, when gambling was illegal in Spain, a covert agreement had been worked out with the government in which the police permitted gambling in the society, according to board members.

The Circle of Fine Arts had seen better days. It was founded in 1880 as a meeting place and cultural center. In the 1920s and '30s, it was a hub of cultural activity embracing every major painter living in Madrid, said Marisa Gonzales, an artist who is treasurer of the new board of directors.

There were baths, a swimming pool, a gym. A siums, workshops, even an exhibit of old books. meeting room downstairs, with windows facing the street, was called the fish bowl, because all the big fish would sit where they could be seen by passers-by. It is being renovated now.

During the Franco era, the cultural life at the circle collapsed. Its one virtue was that it was the last place in Madrid where you could paint a live nude. But management was taken out of the hands of artists and given to political people close to the regime and hig it as an experimental theater.

businessmen who used its resources to do favors for friends, such as renting space on long-term leases at conditions very favorable to the tenants.

Last May, all that changed. Hearing that the board of directors wanted to sell the huilding, Jose Antonio Alonso Giraldez, one of the early members of the society and a longtime patron of the arts, decided to act. He went to the mayor and the oew Socialist minister of culture, Javier Solana, said Gonzales, and they worked out a program that allowed the artists to

The artists' union had asked the ministry for some space for union meetings. The ministry, in turn, made the union a proposition, said Gonzales - who like all the new board members, works without pay. "If we helped them save the circle," she said. "we could have an office in the building."

They met at the Cafe Gijon, where in many of them had congregated as members of the anti-Franco opposition, and they formed a new board of directors. composed mostly of artists, and some lawyers. A new board provided new leadership, new ideas, new programs and new organization, an official at the ministry of culture said.

The circle's workers had been unpaid for five months, and were on strike. With some help from the Ministry of Culture, which paid for the renovations and a vigorous recruitment drive, the new board paid back salaries and some outstanding debts. They invited 3,000 guests to a happening including music, painting and theater, in which 20 young men and women appeared ball dressed, adorned mostly in face and body paint. The party succeeded in attracting new members. In the last six months, 800 people have ioined the neganization.

The new board has organized art exhibitions, including one of contemporary United States art, photographic shows, concerts, lectures, seminars, sympo-siums, workshops, even an exhibit of old books...

Workmen are turning the downstairs bingo room into a small exhibition hall, and renovating the restaurant, which the new board hopes will replace the Café Gijon as an artist's hang-out. The large gambling room is temporarily closed. The board hopes to reopen

U.S. Film 'Pollution' Bores Chinese Scholars

By Judith Michaelson Los Angeles Times Service

LOS ANGELES — Chen Mei allowed — most reluctantly — that she will never see "Never Say Never Again." She fell asleep in the middle of it in a movie theater here.

Chen found Sean Connery as James Bond agent 007 good-looking, but she said she thought there was "too much violence, too much killing," and she hinted that the movie is indicative of what the Chinese call "spiritual pollution," something the West can keep to itself. The editor of World Cinema, an academic film magazine in China

Chen and her associate, Cheng Jihua, the executive secretary of the China Film Association, have just finished teaching an 11-week graduate course at University of California, Los Angeles titled "Chinese Film: History and Aesthetics." It was the first time that a Chinese film scholar has ever taughr outside the country, she said.

Chen speaks fluent English, having first learned it in the United States as a fourth-grader in Berkeley, California, in 1948. She kept up her reading in English after her family returned to China following the ist victory in 1949. "Twe read everything from Knights of the Round Table' to 'The World According to Garp.' She said that Cheng - who speaks un English - is "the film historian in China." They brought with them 30 feature films and videotapes spanning a 50-year period of Chinese filmmaking, including "Rickshaw

Boy" and "My Memories of Old Peking," which has been entered in the Oscar competition. During the weekly four-hour sessions, Cheng lectured for 20 minutes, then Chen translated and ran the class discussions. During a recent interview, Chen did most of the talking, stopping only occasionally to translate her partner's answers. She said that movies are a popular art form in China, with about 120 made each year. "About a third are really very good." The subjects of Chinese films, Chen said, are broad-based. "Our history is 5,000 years old and our country is huge, and something of all of this will be reflected. Our movies are about children, about families, bout neighborhoods. We are not interested in doing 'Star Wars' of

Chen and Cheng attend regular screenings of U.S. films at the U.S. Embassy in Beijing, Cheng said that of all the recent American films he has seen, he most enjoyed "On Golden Pond." Chen agreed. She was particularly touched, she said, by the relationship between Henry Fonda and the young boy Billy. In China now we have differences between the generations. Before 1976 even film experts saw foreign films "off and on, not very regularly." For the general Chinese public in the decades between 1940 and 1976, "The Chinese were on their own track," Chen said.

The Chinese do remember the movies of the 1930s and '40s. Chen said. She talked in loving detail about a 1940 movie called "Waterloo Bridge" starring Robert Taylor and Vivien Leigh. And she said that Charlie Chaplin, whose movies were not shown during those decades, is a particular favorite.

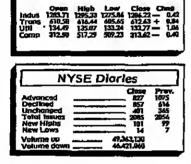

Only a few American movies have been shown in China since the end of the Cultural Revolution - an odd mixture, including Alfred Hitchcock's "Rebecca" (1940), based on the Daphne du Maurier novel about a Cornish landowner and his naive second wife; Hitchcock's "Spellbound" (1945), and "Nightmare in Badham County" (1976), a made-for-TV movie horror story about two college women driving cross-country (one is attacked by a small-town sheriff and both are beaten).

In 1981 there was a special American film festival with five features: "Strane," "The Black Stallion," "Guess Who's Coming to Dinner?" "Singin' in the Rain" and "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs,"

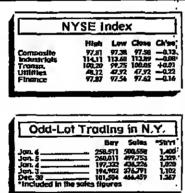

Asked wby there were not more American movies in China, Chen hlamed U.S. film studios for charging too high a price. China prefers to be charged a flat fee; the studios want their fee to be based on admissions. she said. She added that the movies wouldn't sell in the Chinese countryside, since the peasants are not "prepared. It's too alien, too outside of the way of their lives."

It was Chen's first trip back to the United States in 32 years. She said she was surprised by the caliber of her 16 students. "We call them 'our children.' They were very intelligent, they worked very hard, there was no snickering, no whispering. It was a very rewarding experience."

Chicago Merc, Singapore Exchange To Begin Link in Eurodollar Futures

EW YORK — The Chicago Mercantile Exchange and the Singa-pore international Monetary Exchange, which plan to link opera-sions this summer, have decided to start with Eurodollar futures rather than the gold futures that had been planned.

. Not only is Singapore the major Eurodollar market in Asia, but impodollar futures on the Chicago exchange are also among the most actively traded financial contracts and are the contracts most used by Enropean hedgers.

Hedgers or speculators

would operate in either market as if both markets were one.

One reason is that Middle Easterners, particularly those in the oil-exporting countries, now own most of the dollars that are held outside the United States and have increasing ly abandoned gold as their chief form of savings. The continued strength of the dollar has encouraged this trend.

As a result, European bankers and other money managers with whom these funds are placed have been increasingly using the Euro-dollar futures to hedge these funds against a possible weakening of the value of the dollar. Their opposites in Asia are doing the same. Loose networks of banks have long traded foreign exchange this way.

"Because the Eurodollar market is global and operates around the clock, we at the Chicago Merc must give our traders the opportunity to expand their trading hours," said Leo Melamed, the special counsel to the exchange, who was the leading architect of financial futures when he was

To do this, the two exchanges are creating an economical "single offset system" of trading. Essentially this means that a hedger or speculator in either market would operate as if both markets were one.

Instead of two commissions and two sets of margins, the trader would face only one. The clearinghouses of both exchanges would in effect act as one in debiting and crediting the trader's accounts. All this would be done electronically and the result would be a much longer trading day for all participants. It would also permit trading when holidays close either market. Eurodollar traders, especially those in Chicago, would have to think in terms of a 24-hour trading session.

'All Well and Good'

"This is all well and good," said Thomas A. Russo, partner in the Wall Street law firm of Cadwalader, Wickersham & Taft, and a Intures-market specialist who helped write the first regulatory rules for the Commodity Futures Trading Commission. "But there are a number of things that will have to be worked out, and I'm sure they will be."

Of prime concern to Mr. Russo is that the oversight or regulatory powers of the Commodity Futures Trading Commission over U.S. iraders may be lessened, "although the Singapore exchange has agreed to most of the basic rules used by the agency."

Susan Phillips, chairman of the CFTC, will discuss this with officials in .Singapore within a few days. It is also understood that officials of the Internal Revenue Service would like assurances that the exchange linkup would not open a window to "tax spreaders" who use futures to continuously roll over tax liabilities from one year to another.

Tax Rollovers

The tax rollovers, which the IRS frowns on, are accomplished by creating paper losses in one year that are offset by gains in another. Because the pricing structure of futures in Eurodollars is based on interest rates, rather than seasonal or other factors, the futures would lend themselves to such operations.

"It is very important that these and other rules be established in both markets before trading starts for three major reasons," Mr. Russo said.
"One, there will be many more such linkages in the coming years because all futures and options markets are becoming global affairs, if they are ot already so."

Second, he continued, "the rapid integration of the securities and futures market has exposed many, many gray areas of regulation that could become frightening time bombs. Third, the success of the Chicago-Singapore linkage makes it extremely important for the futures and options industry to plug all holes now because it would be a crime to have regulatory disputes at either end to hobble this pioneering effort."

Meanwhile, Alan J. Brody, president of the Commodity Exchange in New York, the U.S. precious metals futures and gold-options market, said that Comex officials were seriously studying two proposals to expand trading hours.

While many of our member firms already operate around the clock by "passing the book' electronically, we still haven't dropped the idea of dengthening trading hours in New York," Mr. Brody said. He added: "Another possibility being much discussed is to link up Comex with the gold markets in Tokyo, Hong Kong, and Sydney, now that the Australian authorities have eased their once stringent currency controls."

As it is, the Amsterdam Gold Options Exchange, which opened its doors in April 1981, recently linked up with the Montreal and Vancouver stock exchanges where similar instruments are traded. New York Times Service

Ailing French Arms Firms Making Sales Drive

By Axel Krause

PARIS - France's arms industry, squeezed hard by a financial crunch in the Third World and growing worldwide competition, is intensifying its international sales campaign, notably in Asia, Latin America and in the United States.

Leading French weapon makers, with the active backing of the Socialist government, are attempting to maintain — and even improve — the industry's position as the world's third-ranking exporter of military equipment, after the Soviet Union and the United States.

"There is little or no demand right now, and everyone connected with our activity is slowing down. . . . It is a worldwide crisis," said Marc Cauchie, director of export sales for the French government's General Armaments Agency.

Mr. Cauchie's views were widely echoed by executives of both state and privately owned companies supervised by the agency. The companies employ a total of 310,000 persons. Many said they planned production cuts and/or layoffs in the weeks ahead.

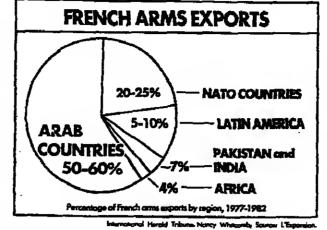

Heari Martre, chairman of Aérospatiale, France's largest acrospace company, whose orders last year fell 17 percent from the 1982 level, told reporters Monday night that 1984 would be another "very difficult year" for the company in both the military and civilian sectors. He said be saw no recovery before 1985, at the earliest. And, he added, that recovery would be "relatively slow."

It is in this gloomy context that the arms companies are pressing their new campaign.

In U.S. markets in particular, French companies contend that there in U.S. markets in particular, French companies contend that French-made are "gaps" in the Pentagon's military requirements that French-made equipment and technology can fill. "We definitely are hustling harder for export orders," a senior industry executive said.

According to Defense Ministry and industry estimates, orders for military exports at the end of 1983 fell sharply, in about 30 billion francs ($3.5 billion) from a record 41.6 billion francs in 1982. Aircraft, mainly Mirage 2000s made by Dassault-Breguet, accounted for about 80 percent of the orders. Most of the orders were placed by governments in the Middle East and North Africa. Sales of ground-based reapons systems accounted for about 10 percent of the orders.

The Arab countries now are spending their money in other ways. We all are looking for markets in other areas of the world," said Michel Carpentier, a sales executive of Thomson-CSF, France's largest electronics company.

State-owned Thomson, which exports 70 percent of the military equipment it makes, was awarded a 1.2-billion-franc contract by Kuwait last November to modernize Kuwait's air-defense system, It was the company's largest single order of its kind in 1983. But, "We (Continued on Page 9, Col.1)

Recording Restrictions Dropped in EC

BRUSSELS (Renters) — European performing right societies, which grant permission on behalf of copyright owners to make and market gound recordings on payment of a royalty, have agreed to abandon geographical restrictions on exports within the Common Market, the European Commission said Monday.

"Under the threat of legal action by the commission, the West German society, GEMA, dropped earlier objections to allowing distributors to export sound recordings to their branches in other community states mless extra fees were paid.

The commission said the societies now agreed that sound recordings that are lawfully manufactured in a member state, made with the copyright owner's permission and marketable in that state may be sold without restriction in the community.

2 Likely to Head New GM Groups

New York Times Service DETROIT - Robert C. Stempel, general manager of the Cher-rolet division, and Lloyd E. Reuss, general manager of the Buick divi-sion, seem likely to head two new groups that would result from a proposed reorganization of Gener-Motors Corp., according to people in the auto industry.

Sources in the industry predicted that the GM board would approve the plan, which would consolidate the company's automotive manufacturing and marketing opera-tions, at n meeting in New York on Monday.

General Motors, the sources said, plans to realign its five auto-mobile divisions, Chevrolet, Pontiac, Oldsmobile, Buick and Cadillac, and its Fisher body and assembly divisions into two groups, with one concentrating on large long as five years, according to the cars and the other on smaller cars. The auto divisions will continue to exist, they said, but will become primarily sales and marketing organizations, with designing, engineering and manufacturing concentrated in the two consolidated

Mr. Stempel, 50, is said to be likely to head the small-car group, while Mr. Reuss, 47, would take charge of the large-car group.

If the change is approved, the images of the car divisions would be more sharply defined. Chevrolet and Pontiac would gradually eliminate all their car models that are larger than the current "A" body intermediate, which is sold as the Chevroles Celebrity and Pontiac 6000. Oldsmobile, Buick and Cadillae would sell nothing smaller than the "A" body. The realignment of the models might take as

At present Chevrolet and Pontiac sell cars almost as big as the els, while all five divisions have models based on the subcompact

Mr. Stempel was the manager of the Pontiac division from November 1978 until August 1980, when he was sent to West Germany to manage GM's Opel subsidiary. He returned to the United States in February 1982 to manage the Chevrolet division. Mr. Reuss, like Mr. Stempel, is a former chief engineer at Chevrolet. He became manager of Buick in 1980 and is credited with develop-ing the "Buick City" concept under which the plant at Flint, Michigan. will be integrated into one manufacturing complex, similar to those used by Japanese auto companies.

Harrods Expects A Sales Record

LONDON — Despite a car-bomb explosion that killed six people Dec. 17, Harrods is expected to become the first individual department store in Britain to post annual sales of more than £200 million ($280 million), store executives say.

Aleck Craddock, Harrods chairman and managing direc-tor, said Sunday that sales for this fiscal year, which ends Jan. 28, passed the £200-million level Saturday. Sales for the year ending in January 1983 reached £190 million, which at the time was a national record. The Irish Republican Army claimed responsibility for the explosion, which also injured 94 persons.

Murdoch Focuses on Warner Film Operation

Compiled by Our Staff From Disputcher
GENEVA — Rupert Murdoch said Monday that if he does wage a proxy battle for control of Warner Communications Inc. it will be to preserve the value of Warner's movie operations. The Australian publisher spoke to the bankers during presentation of an 8-to-10-year bond issue of 100 million Swiss francs ($44.7 million) that is to be launched this week under terms yet to be announced. He said the bond issue by nne of his subsidiaries, Newscorp Nether-lands Antilles NV, is not connected with his bid for control of Warner. The bond issue is just to raise working capital and has been in the pipeline a long time," he said.

4th Period Loss LAS VEGAS, Nevada — Coleco Industries

Inc. will report a loss for the fourth quarter and a profit for all 1983, Morton E. Handel, executive vice president, corporate communications.

He told a meeting of securities analysts at the consumer electronic show here that the fourth quarter loss was due to the limited level of Adam home computers shipped during the peri-

Adam was announced in June but shipments did not start until October, several weeks later than the company originally expected.

Mr. Handel said Coleco "should see a quick return to profitability in the first quarter" of this year.

He also said a recent agreement with Coleco's bank creditors has left the company in excellent financial shape and "should put to rest" specu-lation within the investment community that Coleco is facing a financial crisis. Last week Coleco announced an agreement with bank creditors which eliminates a previous requirement to be dear of debt during 1984. Coleco has U.S. and Canadian credit lines of

American Express Scuttles Cuba Pact

By Paul Lewis

New York Times Sernce PARIS — An agreement be-tween 150 Western banks stretching out repayment of $130 million in medium-term debt owed them by Cuba has collapsed because of opposition by American Express Cn., according to banking sources. It is believed to be the first time since the international debt crisis began 18 months ago that a private debt-rescheduling agreement be-tween banks and a Third World borrower has broken down because nne creditor refused to accept terms approved by all the others. American Express effectively scuttled the agreement toward the end of December, the banking sources said, by telling other banks that the Swiss-based Trade Develcoment Bank, which American Express now controls, is subject to a U.S. ban nn loans to Cuba. As a result, American Express felt that it could not agree to stretch out repayment of about 5 million Deutsche marks that the bank lent Cuba in 1978, when it was owned by Edmond J. Safra, a Lebanese-

Last October, the Reagan administration blocked a proposed meeting of Western creditor goveruments to reschedule about $1,3 billion that Cuba owed them. The meeting was to be held by the Club of Paris, the group of financial officials who accouste with countries that cannot repay their official in-ternational debts.

Alaska to Offer First Eurobonds

ANCHORAGE, Alaska — Alaska Housing Financing Corp. said Monday that it would offer its first Eurobonds, a 10-year, $100-million issue, nn Feb. 1.

The agency said it will become the first U.S. state agency in raise funds in the Euromarket.

The agency said last month that it established an overseas-financing corporation in the Netherlands An-

Instead, non-American creditors held an informal meeting on their own and agreed to give Cuba more time to pay. Cuba has a total of about $3.5 billion debt to Western governments and banks. Under the new agreement reject-ed by American Express, Cuba would have repaid over the next seven years about $130 million in medium-term loans falling due to Western banks between September 1982 and the end of 1983. The interest rate was set at 25 percent-percent Monday. Bankers said that one way to resolve the deadlock is for the Trade Development Bank to sell its Cuban debt to a non-American

The bank has already offered its Cuban paper to Credit Lyonnais, but so far the state-owned French bank has refused to buy it.

Alternatively, American Express could try to negotiate a settlement of its claim privately with the Cuhave jurisdiction over the outstandban authorities, the sources said. Finally, American Express might age point above the London inter-bank offered rate, which was 10% debt in the British courts, which

THE BALLAD OF TYPHOID MARY By J.F. Federspiel Translated by Joel Agee. 150 pp. $12.95. Dutton, 2 Park Avenue, New York, N.Y.

Reviewed by Richard Eder

COR Thomas Mann it was tuberculosis and for Albert Camus it was bubonic plague. To evoke an image of spiritual rot, they used a real disease and wrote, respectively, "The Magic Mountain" and "The Plague."

Now a Swiss writer, J.D. Federspiel, has constructed an icy fable around another epi-demic. The Ballad of Typhoid Mary is a penitential vision of Western prosperity as the meubating phase of mortal illness.

The story builds around history. The wave of mmigration between the Civil War and the end of the 19th century was a foundation of the United States's wealth. The classic picture is of mpoverished masses arriving in wretched conditions, and, in a generation or two, sharing in the wealth they helped to create. There were, of course, inconveniences. The immigrant slums were hellholes, never eliminated but simply passed on to successive new waves of the underclass, and the initiation ordeal threatens to consume the membership. For Federspiel, it already has. The immi grant ships, crowded and festering, brought disease as well as hopes. Hence, health stations, quarantine and delousing powder. The precautions were not foolproof. There were periodic scares about epidemics.

"Ballad," written sparely and elliptically, builds around one such "Typhoid Mary." It is told second- and third-hand; each of these filters contributes to create distance and infuse a deliberate banality with a quality of legend. The narrator is Howard Rageet, a middle-aged pediatrician living comfortably on the Upper West Side in Manhattan, but mortally ill. To accompany, and perhaps elucidate his impending death, he writes e narration based on the journals of his grandfather, also a physician, who was one of two doctors who traced and eventually discovered the protagonist.

She emerges as a 13-year-old Swiss girl arriving in the United States in 1868 aboard a typhoid-ridden immigrant ship. Both her parents died oo board; she was taken into the protection of the ship's cook, who taught her his trade and initiated her sexually. For the rest. of her life she uses his name, calling herself-

Mary Mallon. One of the health-station doctors, moved by sympathy and lust, gets her past quarantine and takes her home. She is not ill; she never will be ill, in fact, until she dies of a stroke. She will be ill, in fact, until she dies of a stroke. She is, however, a perpenual typhoid carrier. Her doctor-protector sickens and dies, and she moves on, working first as a helper in neighborhood shops, then as an assistant to the chef in a fashionable hotel, then as a cook in a succession of wealthy households.

Wherever she goes, some people of the establishment or household fall ill and die. Not severyone she is close to succumbs. For years she lives on and off with a small-time triminal whom she loves passionately; but he, through impotence or some more mysterious withdraw l, will not make love to her. Mary is beautiful, strongly sexed and willed, capable of ferocity and fierce attachments.

Does she know what she is? What does she feel? It is a question that obsesses the narrator. and one he cannot fully answer. "What I imagme is this: nothing but a huge indifference," he writes. "The indifference that attacks us all occasionally and that is cow breaking in upon us as the latest and probably final spiritual

Mary is more than an unsettling protagonist. Mary is more than an unsettling protagonist....

She is the dark side of the Gilded Age, the hidden bill for a decades-long orgy of accumutation and spending, the crack in the edifice. She arrives in wealthy household after household as a symbol of the good life: a splendid cook devoted to feeding her patrons well. But affluence is a dream that becomes a nightmare and propositive is possessed.

It is a laconic work, put together with great skill. Our disquiet mounts; something is winching us higher, and we cannot see what it is. There is a bleakness to the writing, and the arbitrary quality of any parable. This is a chilly work, perhaps too much so to be quite real. Bot it is a chill we catch.

مكتزامن الاجل Raiders Rip Seahawks, 30-14, Win Super Bowl Slot

By Paul Attner

Washington Post Service LOS ANGELES -- The Los Angeles Raiders played to their tough and intimidating reputation here Sunday in overpowering the Seattle Scahawks, who dared to stand intheir way of a Super Bowl marchup with the Washington Redskins. The Raiders, 30-14 winners, turned the American Conference championship into a showcase of National Football League brawn and talent.

It was difficult to tell what moved them more - the Scahawks' ill-timed talking during the week or the thought of a rematch with the Rodskins, who beat them, 37-35, during the regular season.

Seattle was saying things about us during the week that they shouldn't have," said Raider safety Vann McElroy. "We wanted to show them that you play this game, you don't talk it."

Seattle got the message. By the time the Raiders led, 27-0, midway through the third quarter, the Seahawks had been outgained, 326 yards to 17. "It's unbelievable to do that defensively," said cornerback Mike Haynes, "But when this defense is going good, I don't know how anyone gains anything on us."
The Scahawks had beaten Los Angeles twice during the regular season. The Raiders committed 13 turnovers in those games, and quarterback Jim Plunkett played so badly in the first that he was benched the next week.

But Sunday it was Seattle that Dave Krieg and Jim Zorn threw five interceptions, defensive backs Mike Davis and Lester Hayes picking off two apiece). And it was Krieg for one of the three Raider sacks, while defensive back Plunkett who performed magnifi-

New England Patriots. And receiver Cliff Branch pulled a hamstring while finishing off a 99-yard TD pass play. The Raiders have wondered what it would be like to play the Redskins with all three starting.

"We should have beaten them the first time," said linebacker Rod Martin, "and we've wanted a second chance. We're a better team now because everyone is healthy. This is the way it should be - the two best teams in fontball playing in the Super Bowl' In advancing to the Super Bowl for the fourth time, the Raiders left no doubt that they are the best in the AFC. They have won eight of their last nine games, including two impressive playoff victories. What made Sunday's triumph even more stunning was its simplicity: Los Angeles shunned the fancy and settled for manhandling Seattle.

The Raiders were determined to shut off Curt Warner, whose cutback running is the key to the Sea-bawks' ball-control offense. Warner, who had 176 yards in the two earlier games, never had a chance; be scratched out a seasonmade the mistakes (quarterbacks low 26 yards - 18 in the first half, when the outcome still was some-

Said defensive end Lyle Alzado: The first time Warner came my way, I hit him. Then I hit him again and told him. 'You come around my end again, I'll knock your head

With Warner ineffective, Krieg was at the mercy of the Raider pass back defense, Krieg was mauled for three sacks and had several near escapes. It wasn't a pretty sight.

"I would say Krieg was intimi-dated," said Alzado. "But wouldn't you be if you got belted like that? He hurt us before hy scrambling. This time, we didn't let him ger

Krieg, the AFC's second-rated passer, had completed almost 67 percent of his passes in the playoffs, mostly by relying on play-action fakes. The Raiders took those away and made him look like a first-year starter - 3-of-9 for a total of 12 yards and 3 interceptions. He was benched in the third quarter. Zorn came on to lead two scoring drives, but he also had two passes picked off.

"They kept changing things de-fensively," Krieg said. "We should have learned to change, too, and adapt. But we didn't"

His coach, Chuck Knox, blamed the debacle on the Seahawks' inability to "get any rhythm established --- we got here by not making mistakes and trying to control the flow and tempo of the game."

Even Knox couldn't explain why his team got involved in early afterthe-play fracases. The Seahawks

The Raiders always open with that routine, which linebacker Matt Millen calls the three Ps: "Pushing, pointing and punching." The Seahawks kept fighting instead of playing and found themselves behind, 17-0, late in the first half. Yet

The Raiders, who hadn't made a serious error in the first half, lost a fumble on their opening possession of the third period. Krieg promptly threw a pass right into Millen's stomach. Later in the quarter, the Raiders ended the little remaining suspense when Allen ran 43 yards to the Seattle 3 and then caught a TD pass from Plunkett for a 27-0

Now the Raiders can concentrate on the Redskins. "I talked to a few of their players after the regular-season game," Branch said. "I told 'em we'd see them again in the Super Bowl. They told me they

49ers Blow Whistle on Officials

By Michael Wilbon Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON - The San Francisco 49ers were stomping mad about how they lost Sunday's Nadonal Conference championship game, especially about the penalties that helped decide the 24-21 ontcome.

"If the Redskins are so mighty, ... then how come they gotta get help from some damn referees?" Posing the question was Ronnie Lott, the cornerback who was penalized for holding Charlie Brown, away from the play, at the San Francisco 8-yard line on Washington's winning drive. Coming on third down and the ball at the 13, the penlty kept alive a drive that culminated four plays later in Mark Moseley's 25-yard field goal with 40 seconds to play.

Three plays before Lott was flagged, fellow cornerback Eric Wright had been penalized 27 yards for interfering with receiver Art Monk. On 2d-and-10 from the San Francisco 45, Joe Theismann passed toward Monk. The ball appeared to be overthrown and a television replay showed Wright's left hand on Monk as the ball landed five yards away. "The rule says interference can be called if the ball is catchable," Wright said. "There's no way he could have caught the ball. I pushed him, but it was after the ball was way overthrown. It was a bad call - I was our game has to be decided by dramatic calls that come so late and are so close people have to debate whether they are good calls." Nick Skorich, the NFL's assistant supervisor of officials, said both penalties were "judgment calls."

Several 49ers felt there had been other officiating inequities. In the second quarter, Theismann threw 46 yards to oght end Clint Didier, putting the ball at the San Francisco 18. Replays indicated Didier might have pushed off on safety Carlton Williamson, but no flag was thrown. Four plays later, John Riggins scored for a 7-0 lead.

TUCSON, Arizona (AP) — Tom Watson beat Gil Morgan, 2-and-1, Sunday to win the Tucson Match-Play Championship, the first event on the 1984 Professional Golfers Association tour. Scott Hoch finished third by defeating Lanny Wadkins, 2-and-1.

Trailing Watson all the way after bogeying the fourth hole, Morgan had rallied for a 1-up victory over Wadkins in Sunday's semifinals. Watson gained the final on a 2-and-1 decision over Hoch. In the first match-play event on the tour in 11 years, Watson recorded his first home-soil triumph since the 1982 U.S. Open. "Jesse Jackson's headquarters. ... Oh heilo, John. Thanks for calling. Tell Jesse things are going really well. The candidate has been on the three major news shows every night for the past month. He t four minutes on his visit to El Salvador, three when he visited Qadhafi, and five when he went to Brazil to renegotiate their loan with the United States. Ted Koppel has had him on Nightline all week explaining his plan to settle the Israeli-PLO problem, and Time magazine put him on the cover three weeks in a row. Where are you now? . . . You're at the Vatican talking to the Pope about Poland? Did they let in the camera crew? . . . Great. The Mondale and Glenn people are going crazy. And the White House is fuming. The president called a news confer ence the other night on foreign affairs and nobody came. Where are you going from Rome? . . . You don't know? . . . # Argentine Pioneers: High Tech at End of World

By Edward Schumacher New York Times Service

SHUAIA, Argentica They are Argentina's new pioneers, young people in search of adventure, elbow room or, more often, a stake in this southernmost town in the world.

They have come to an isolated land of shrouded mountains and whistling winds at the tip of South America, where the continent breaks into islands and descends into an often howling sea.

Ferdinand Magellan, awed by its eeriness, oamed the land Tierra del Fuego, the land of fire, mistaking the Indian fires at night for natural phenomena. Three centuries later, Charles

Darwin, sailing past the snug harbor here oo the Beagle Channel, jotted in his scientific log that the channels among the islands "appeared from their gloominess to lead beyond the confines of this

In the last three years, today's pioneers have made this long-neelected Argentine territory boom. Electronics factories have sprung up, labor is in short supply and the population, though still just 36,000 in a land half the size of Switzerland, has grown by nearly 50 percent.

Driving many of the newcomers is a frontier spirit rare in Argentine history. Most of the nation's 28 million people live in the cosmopolitan capital of Buenos Aires, 1,400 miles (2,240 kilometers) to the north, and in the comfortable cities of the surrounding pampas. The rest of the country remains largely uninhabited and its vast resources untapped.

Jorge Gomez Nux, a 30-year old-civil engineer, came fresh out of college in 1982 with his new wife, Mariana Interviewed in their tiny prefabricated house, jammed into an unfinished, muddy lot with dozens of similar ones, they were unsure they would stay.
"But I'm getting experience," Nux said, "and I'm opening up a new land."

To be sure, today's pioneers do not live primitively. They have hot water and telephones. But there is no paved road out of town; the only planes are air force ones, there is a critical housing shortage and the weather, influenced by the nearby antarctic, is been Chilean residents, who until three years ago made up more than half of the population but are now dwindling in oumber. They came from their poorer country in search of work, but the military government stopped re-newing their visas, banned them from buying property and re-stricted their fishing, a practice that Juan Muñoz, the Chilean manager of a crabbing company here, said had forced many boats to be beached for lack of crews. Argentines are ranchers, not fishermen," he said.

The channel conflict is one reason Tierra del Fuego is a territory. ruled through an appointed gov-ernor from Buenos Aires. It is too soon to tell if Alfonsin will contime past policies, though what the pioneers demand is a more fundamental change.

In a simply decorated gradeschool auditorium that seemed to belie what a moderator called a "historic moment," the first terri-torial legislature was sworn in recently. The 15 members from three parties all called for the national government to grant provincial status. Though the territory already has two congressmen, the move would give it senators. the right to elect a governor and the leverage to reduce the local power of the navy, which owns much of the prime land.

"The country is entering a new " said Jorge Bericua, a territorial legislator, "and we want to fully participate." of lonking south, like the Chileans canwhile, there is what the Rev. Jose Zinc, 60, a tall and hearty Roman Catholic priest, said was the need for still more pioneers with the "Quixote spirit." Bursting into a store one day, wearing a black beret and clapping his large hands against the chill, he complained that some of the newcomers had been responsible for crimes in the area, such as a safe robbery recently at a nearby Falkland Islands, over sheep farm. But to old-timers such as Martin Lawrence, 62, the fourth-generation head of one of the territory's two oldest families, the changes have been mostly welcome. Noting how even he had switched from raising sheep to raising cattle to satisfy the tastes of the new pioneers, he said, "It's the Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts in Washington Sun-day. Respleadent in full dress and medals, the ambassadors made their debut as "The Ambassador's Trio" in "If You Go In," from Gilbert and Sullivan's "Iolanthe." Sir Oliver Wright, the British em-bassador, was Lord Mountararat in the trio, Thomas Klestil of Austria was Lord Tolloller and Bern Vernier-Palliez of France the Lord Chancellor. The occasion was The Washington Opera Follies 1984 a fund-raiser for the local opera company. Leonard Berustein conducted Mahler's Symphony No. 2 in C minor, "Resurrection." at "A Concert for Peace" Sunday night at the Washington Cathedral.

. . Eric Peters set off in his little barrel-shaped boat on a round-the world voyage on New Year's Eve. He was back in record time — a mere eight days. Peters, 44, who sailed across the Atlantic in the Sfoot-10%-inch Torricky-Nav, put out from London's Putney pier. Hehad gone only as far as Chelsea, a few miles downstream, when the boat's engine coughed and cut out The Port of London Authority decreed that without proper equipment Peters could not use the river as his starting point. River police escorted him Sunday back to Putney, where a crane lifted the boat ont of the water.

We are the busy bees of an international businessman with offices and residences in the U.K. Europe and the Middle East, and need two more 'workers' in the hive. You should be a non-smoker, between 26 and 34 years of age, have all the usual secretarial skills and possess a U.K. driving licence. You will not mind living in: you will definitely be prepared to accept that this is not a job but a way of a life requiring a 24 hour a day involvement. You will not even mind acting in a valet canacity between residences.

The 'honey' is in the form of a tax free salary with accomodation provided and, when you need it, transport. You will be able to 'buzz-off' for six weeks paid holiday each year. If you are a serious candidate—why not contact our 'Queen Bee' at: Box No: 034268, IHT, 63 Long Acre, London WC2
